

FOREWORD

Since coming together in early 2022, the Sport Volunteer Coalition have been working hard to understand how to ensure Australia's 2.9 million sport volunteers receive the recognition they deserve and raise awareness of the role they play.

Without volunteers, Australian sport wouldn't exist. Volunteers are the backbone of local sporting clubs, freely contributing their time and knowledge for the benefit of their sport as well as the participants, their families and the local community. We want to celebrate all that volunteers bring to sport, while attracting more volunteers, and better supporting the ones we have.

We are delighted to share the Sport Volunteer Coalition Action Plan, which outlines the actions we will take to achieve our vision for volunteering in Australian sport:

"People from all walks of life see and realise opportunities to contribute to individual, club and community goals in a way that suits them."

We want to enable more Australians to experience volunteering, create inclusive and accessible opportunities to volunteer and foster a positive safe and fulfilling experience that puts people and our communities first. At its heart, volunteering is about helping others. Volunteering in sport has many benefits, it can create a sense of belonging, connect communities, can improve physical and mental health, all whilst enjoying the fun of sport.

With community sport facing many challenges following the COVID-19 pandemic that interrupted so much of 2020 and 2021, the focus on volunteering is more critical than ever.

This plan includes actions for the Australian Sports Commission [ASC] and the Sport Volunteer Coalition however to make meaningful change it will require the entire sport sector to get involved. We call upon national and state sporting organisations, all levels of Government, and the broader sport industry to reach out and seek opportunities to work together to advance sport volunteering.

We look forward to reimagining the future of volunteering in sport, with a renewed focus on putting our volunteers at the heart of community sport.

Volunteers in sport contribute an estimated $4 billion of labour value each year.

An estimated 2.9 million volunteers make sport happen across Australia, coaching players, managing community clubs and providing positive sporting experiences for participants of all abilities and at all stages of life.

The ASC is specifically focusing on volunteering in sport to support the industry's recovery from COVID-19. In 2021, the ASC worked with partners from across the sport and volunteering sectors to produce the 'Future of Sport Volunteering' Insights report, develop a vision for sport volunteering and a Sport Volunteering National Plan.

The ASC formed the inaugural Sport Volunteer Coalition in January 2022 to provide expert advice and guidance on development, implementation, and evaluation of this four-year Sport Volunteer Coalition Action Plan.

Informed by consultation and insights, the plan includes four strategic themes and clear actions which will be coordinated by the ASC and the Sport Volunteer Coalition. The impact of the plan will be measured through a robust evaluation framework.

"We want to position volunteering as more than just an "enabler" for Australians to play sport and shine a light on the additional benefits realised from individuals becoming involved in the sporting community through volunteering, including a sense of belonging and community connectedness."

Volunteering:

Time willingly given for the common good and without financial gain

There are significant challenges for sporting organisations and sport volunteers that have been exacerbated by the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic.

THESE CHALLENGES INFORM THE ACTIONS IN THIS PLAN.

COVID-19 has significantly impacted volunteering with immediate concerns about the return of volunteers to sport.

The proportion of Australians who volunteer increased in the past year but is still well below the pre-COVID rate¹

The majority of people who stopped volunteering have not yet returned¹

Between 2019 and 2021:

- > the estimated number of Australians aged 15+ who took on a non-playing role in sport fell by 106,000, a 3% decline²
- > the proportion of volunteers doing just one role has declined, while those doing three or more has increased²

> the roles that lost the most volunteers were officials and ad-hoc helpers [carrying out tasks such as setting up, packing down, cleaning etc]²

In 2021 there were an estimated 75,000 fewer Australians 15+ putting their hand up to be officials and 73,000 fewer offering to do ad hoc tasks²

Only 82% of pre-COVID and current volunteers are $\mbox{likely to volunteer}$ in the next 12 months 2

Many environmental changes such as busy lifestyles, desire for more flexibility and constant distractions with technology are creating new challenges for sport and sport volunteering.

The volunteer experience is not meeting individual needs

Volunteer roles tend to be time consuming and rigid, discouraging some people from getting involved.

Club cultures with entrenched ways of operating can inhibit participation and involvement of new volunteers

Sport clubs do not have a complete understanding of what volunteers need and how to respond to these needs

Some sport clubs do not have the systems, tools and processes to effectively manage volunteers

The sport ecosystem is highly fragmented and does not have clear roles and responsibilities

Everyone can participate in volunteering, whether they are from a culturally diverse group, are connected/not connected to the sport, young, older, committed/time poor or have a disability.

Volunteer opportunities must be visible and accessible to diverse groups of people. It isn't enough to say you are inclusive – volunteers need to see how they can contribute and see other people like them.

Realising opportunities means clubs have inclusive cultures and the sufficient structure in place to support people to be effective e.g. training, job descriptions.

Volunteering roles need to balance individual, club and community goals so everyone gets something out of it. This value needs to be clearly understood and communicated.

Volunteering needs to be flexible to accommodate different needs. This could include virtual volunteering project based roles and completely flexible roles where people opt in on a week by week basis.
